 The dies of this medal were engraved in Paris at the time when Napoleon was preparing his expedition against England, and after the taking of London (?) they were intended to have been used there. As the invasion did not take place, the medal was never struck. There is said to be only one impression in lead known: this was in the cabinet of Dr. Burney, who sold this with other medals to Mr. Charles Stokes in 1846 or 7, from whom the present owner obtained it. Somewhat later, copies of this medal were struck in England, on which a head by Droz, was substituted for that by Jeuffroy, and the former head was also used for several other medals of the Imperial series. The work on the reverse of these copies is, however, less delicately treated, the word FRAPPÉE in the exergue of the original, is incorrectly written FRAPPÉ on the imitations, and the edge (on some) bears an inscription in raised letters.
